Daily Metals Brief - Copper slips as stocks build and demand slows

Copper fell for a second day as inventories rose for the fourth week, with visible stocks climbing to a six-month high.

Analysts flagged weak demand from the construction sector, citing a continued property slump and a manufacturing slowdown in Europe.

A stronger dollar and hawkish rate expectations weighed on the complex, while risk-off sentiment hit speculative positioning.

New tariff announcements raised concerns about trade flows, and record output from two large mines points to a growing surplus this quarter.

Support is seen at $4.60/lb; a break lower could open a move toward $4.40/lb, with resistance at $4.85/lb.

SYNTHETIC SAMPLE - not real market commentary.