Daily Metals Brief - Copper tightens on supply disruption

Copper rallied for a third session as a strike at a major Chilean mine raised fears of a supply disruption lasting several weeks.

Exchange inventories fell for the fifth straight day, and visible stocks are now at their lowest level this year, a sign of tightening physical supply.

Demand growth remained firm, with grid investment orders and EV demand supporting restocking by Asian fabricators. China's PMI rose above 50 for the second month.

The dollar fell to a two-week low after dovish central bank commentary, a weaker dollar that lifts metals priced in USD.

Technically, the market is testing resistance near $5.15/lb; a breakout above this level would target $5.40/lb, while support sits at $4.95/lb.

SYNTHETIC SAMPLE - not real market commentary.