Daily Metals Brief - Copper range-bound ahead of data

Copper traded in a narrow range as investors awaited inflation data and a central bank decision later this week.

Inventories were little changed, and a minor outage at one smelter was offset by a modest ramp-up at another operation.

Demand signals were mixed: restocking in Asia was reported, but a slowdown in some European orders tempered optimism.

The market holds between support at $4.75/lb and resistance at $4.95/lb.

SYNTHETIC SAMPLE - not real market commentary.